

SANDRA SULSKY

Principal

Dr. Sulsky has designed, analyzed and overseen the successful execution of large, records-based epidemiological studies of occupational injury and disability as well as evaluations of the effectiveness of work place health and safety interventions and outcomes of health care. She has authored or co-authored critical reviews of the epidemiological literature on topics including human health effects of occupational exposures to specific chemicals and to work place physical activities. Dr. Sulsky has been involved in identifying and developing the scientific base needed by the US Food and Drug Administration to support tobacco product regulation since it was given authority to oversee the tobacco industry in 2009. Her expertise as a methodologist has provided a flexible platform for work supporting industry and government clients, and she has provided litigation support in toxic tort cases alleging occupational or environmental causes of disease in individual and class actions. Dr. Sulsky has taught several on-line and in-person courses in her capacity as an adjunct faculty member at the University of Massachusetts/Amherst, and she serves as a peer reviewer for several journals. She has served as an invited expert panelist for the Canadian national and Ontario provincial governments, and is currently a member of the Community Advisory Board appointed by the Dean of the School of Public Health and Health Sciences at the University of Massachusetts/Amherst. An active member of several professional organizations, Dr. Sulsky is currently the Secretary of the International Epidemiological Association and a Fellow of the American College of Epidemiology.

PROJECTS

Methods Development

Collaborated on the development of novel methods for combining toxicological and epidemiological data for weight of evidence analyses, and contributed to the development of an epidemiological model to estimate population-level health effects attributable to changes in patterns of exposure to tobacco products.

Outcomes of Care and Effectiveness Evaluations

Designed and directed analyses of US national hospital discharge data to describe patterns of hospital outcomes among critically ill patients with C. difficile infection, and to investigate the additional burden posed by anemia on hospital patients with chronic kidney disease. Designed and directed analyses of the effectiveness of an outside-the-boot ankle brace in reducing risk of ankle injury in 220,000 Army Paratrooper trainees, and to identify unintended risks associated with ankle brace use during training for the US Army.

Occupational Health

Designed and directed several studies of occupational injuries and disabilities, including a study to identify the most common injuries occurring during Army Basic Combat Training, to identify individual and training-related risk factors for injury, and to support an economic analysis of the direct costs of medical care to the Army due to the treatment of training-related injuries. Also designed and directed a retrospective cohort study of over one million active-duty US Army personnel to investigate delayed-onset, disabling effects of vaccination against anthrax, and designed and implemented a series of case-control studies to elucidate the independent contributions of occupational factors and sociodemographic characteristics to the causation of knee-related injuries and disabilities among enlisted personnel in the US Army.

Critical Reviews and Syntheses

Co-authored comprehensive reviews of the scientific literature pertaining to human health risks associated with occupational exposures, including: low level exposures to manganese and risk of neurodegenerative disease; carbon disulfide exposure and heart disease; occupation and carpal tunnel syndrome; and, occupation and coxarthrosis. Also directed a comprehensive, critical review and evaluation of the effectiveness of available programs designed to reduce the risk of occupational needle stick injuries, and summarized the available epidemiological and surveillance data to describe the occurrence of needle stick injuries.
